NO NEED FOR ATTORNEYS TO COLLECT SOLDIER INSURANCE

The Secretary of the Treasury has announced that neither the soldiers, sailors, nor their dependents or any beneficiaries under the soldier and sailor insurance law need employ attorneys or claim agents to collect the insurance; that the employment of such intermediaries is unnecessary and inadvisable and a needless expense.

The procedure for the presentation and collection of insurance claims is very simple and the proper blanks can be secured from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in Washington. The name of the person in the service who was killed or injured and the relationship which he bore to the person making the claim should be given. If further information or assistance is required by the claimant the Bureau of War Risk Insurance will gladly furnish it.

Circulars have been sent out by claim agents and attorneys offering to assist persons entitled to the benefits of this insurance in collecting their claims. The "pension sharks," who once thrived and fattened under our pension laws, are still a rank memory in this country.

It was hoped that when they were legislated out of existence we would never see their like again. But their successors seem to survive, and the action of Secretary McAdoo in giving prompt warning against these would-be profiteers under the insurance law will be commended by all.

REPORT ON THE GAME WARDEN CASE

Columbia, Feb. 21.—Senators Johnstone and McCown, of the senate investigation committee, in a majority report made public tonight, white-wash Governor Manning's charges against former Chief Game Warden Richardson, and condemn Colonel Richardson in several particulars. Senator Williams, of Lancaster, in a minority report, finds the most serious of the governor's charges unsustained in effect and "that nothing was produced before the committee to assail the personal integrity of Mr. Mr. Richardson, nor tending to show corruption in office." The majority report does not contend that the evidence showed any "fraud or misappropriation of funds," and states that the governor himself said to the committee that he did not so charge.

The majority finds that the evidence showed that Governor Manning's charge that Richardson's recommendation by the Audubon Society for reappointment was brought about by "the admission of about fifty new members to the society," is sustained, insofar as it relates to friends of Mr. Richardson. Senator Williams holds that the charge is sustained "only to the extent that friends and supporters of Richardson engaged in the stated activities with his knowledge and consent," and that "the governor's present appointee to the position of chief game warden invoked the same methods."

The majority finds that the charge that Richardson's deputies made illegal collections of money with his approval "is sustained by the production of letters," and "by oral statements made by the governor before the committee." Senator Williams points out that "practically all these fines were collected from nonresidents who had violated the game laws of this state, and preferred to give and forfeit a cash bond rather than go into the courts," that it was further shown that Mr. Richardson relied upon an opinion from the attorney general's office, exercised such authority in only rare and exceptional cases, and that in the cases cited it was found that the money was properly turned over to the state treasury.

The majority finds that Richardson exceeded his expense account, as charged by the governor, and that "such records as were presented indicated that the office was loosely run and the records kept with lack of regularity," going on to say, however, that "the governor stated that he did not charge fraud or misappropriation of funds, and that the governor himself had stated to the committee that upon later inquiry of the state auditor, he had learned that the item for upkeep of automobiles, really the principal item in the matter, had been paid by Mr. Richardson out of his own private funds, and asked that correction be made in his presentation to the committee." Senator Williams finds that the charge of exceeding the expense account is sustained, but it was pointed out at the hearing that after the passage of the "county license law," the activities of the department were greatly enlarged and the expense proportionately increased; that the expense was less than $300, made by Mr. Richardson under an opinion from the attorney general's office and that "the reasonableness of this excess expenditure is shown by the fact that the present chief game warden has asked for and received at the hands of the legislature an expense allowance of $1,800, or $550 more than the Richardson total, including the "excess."

As to lobbying, the majority sustains the governor's charges as to general lobbying, which, it says, was "in effect admitted by Mr. Richardson." "Senator Williams finds there was no testimony produced before the committee, however, to show that the lobby was unusual or pernicious in its character," but that Richardson

T. W. WOOD & SONS,

frankly admitted he and some friends and subordinates did try to influence and passage of the bill vetoed by the governor and that the facts show that both opponents and proponents of the bill engaged in considerable lobbying in a very customary way.

Both reports find that the governor was in error as to the amount turned over by Richardson to the schools. The majority says "the governor stated that he was in error." Senator Williams says "this charge by the governor is not sustained." The governor's charge was that Richardson had turned over to the schools little more than $6,000, whereas the actual amount turned over was more than $10,500.

Senators Williams, of Lancaster, Johnstone, of Newberry, and McCown, of Florence, the three members of the investigating committee, all belong to the opposite political faction from that of Colonel Richardson, and are known as political supporters of the Manning administration. The minority report of Senator Williams, it will be observed, goes more fully into the controversy than the majority report and is not only in effect an exoneration of Colonel Richardson, but when the two reports are construed together, the entire finding shows the flimsiness of the governor's charges.
